MEYER AND HUNEYCUTT WIN
CLIENT COUNSELING COMPETITION

by Nathan Murawsky

Every spring, second and third-year students compete in the Client Counseling Competition. The object of the competition is for two students, acting as attorneys, to question a client about a situation and then prepare a possible written action.

The competition consists of a half-hour interview, and fifteen minutes of discussion amongst the team over the interview. At all times, the judges sit behind a one-way mirror and listen to the conversation through microphones. The judges then critique the participants, and at the end of the evening pick the best team to advance to the next round.

The judges usually consist of two alumni of the law school and one professor, although for the final round, three alumni make up the judging panel. The winner then advances onto further regional and national competitions, and possibly to the international competition. Last year's team from Villanova won the national competition and placed second in the international competition.

This year, three teams competed on February 17th in the final round of the Villanova competition. The teams were: Steve Cooper, Bill Redman, Mike Fratone, and Brad Batcha, and Matthew Meyer and Dominique Huneycutt, each of whom had previously won two other rounds to progress to the national competition.

The competition was won by Matthew Meyer and Dominique Huneycutt, whose office is located next door in the law school. The team was introduced on March 27 as Mr. Wilson. Each, therefore, not only had to determine who really was the client, the husband or the wife, but also who owned the business.

The judges praised the team for their work, and noted that the topic for this year's final round was the most difficult one yet. The team's performance demonstrated that they had mastered the art of questioning the client, and were able to gather all the necessary information to make a successful argument.

The judges also commended the team for their ability to work well together, and for their ability to think on their feet. They noted that the team was able to respond to unexpected questions, and to adjust their strategy as needed. Overall, the team's performance was described as "excellent" by the judges.

In November of last year, the Villanova Law School officially recognized a new student group that caters to students who did not come to law school directly from undergrad; the Renaissance Law Society.

President and founder, Karin Gunter (IL), explained that the group was created to address the issues surrounding "returning" students. "Returning" students include those students who have spouses, children, or who worked in another field before coming to law school.

Gunter stated that the group is currently working to improve the curriculum, and to provide more resources for returning students. The group is also working to increase awareness of the issues facing returning students, and to provide a support network for them.

The Renaissance Law Society plans to host a series of events throughout the year to educate both returning students and the general public about the unique challenges faced by this group. These events will include panel discussions, workshops, and networking opportunities.

The group is also working to establish a mentorship program for returning students, matching them with experienced attorneys who can provide guidance and support.

SOMEONE YOU SHOULD KNOW:
DARYL BLOOM

Daryl Bloom is the Chair of the Honor Board, and served as his class representative for the two previous years. Next year, Daryl has accepted an office on the Honor Board for the Department of Justice in New York City.

He is not only one of the best dressed students in the law school, but Daryl Bloom is the "honor" in the Honor Board. In his first two years at Villanova, Daryl has represented his class as a member of the honor board, and this year serves as the Chair of the Honor Board. Daryl was raised in "Amish Country" in Lancaster county, and then went to Temple University to get his undergraduate degree and play football. An unfortunate accident, however, badly damaged his knee and kept Daryl from ever playing a game for the Owls. While at Temple, Daryl majored in Philosophy and Criminal Justice.

Daryl then moved on to Villanova Law School. Daryl chose Villanova because "it was nice to know I could leave my car in the parking lot and have it still be there when I returned."

As Chair of the Honor Board, Daryl oversees any conflicts that arise over unfair academic advantages, and supervises the procuring of final exams. However, unlike most people, Daryl has done much more at Villanova than being an Honor Board representative. Daryl has participated in the Environmental Law Society, the Docket, and is the Lexis representative for the law school.

Perhaps, though, what makes Daryl unique is his dynamic personality. Daryl’s friends will tell you that he always has a positive attitude about him which he spreads to anyone he comes in contact with. All the Honor Board Representatives feel that Daryl is great to work with, and is the consummate professional.

Daryl spent last summer working for Bill Ryan, the Delaware County District Attorney, and after graduation, Daryl will go to work for the Honors Program at the Department of Justice in New York City.

Daryl’s advice to first year students; "As a law student and attorney it is easy to be consumed with being at the top of your class or winning a case. Often the most overlooked is the "right thing" to do, i.e. stepping on others to get to the top. So it is important to keep things in perspective by balancing legal knowledge with knowledge and values which make up who you are today... values which you have developed you to a position to help other and to make change."

Twelve Good Things You Should Know About VLS

By the Angry Aging Man
This is an article for those of you who didn't think I could do it.

1. The people who work here: Mike (Cafeteria Mike). Probably the friendliest person at VLS. He always loves you up on fries and he often buys you the beverage of your choice. He's a local establishment which shall remain nameless.

2. Wendyl Barron and her deep pockets. I like her because she's like a drug pusher; she is always handing out money. I'm not sure if I'll feel the same way about her in a year when the bills come due, but for right now she is very high on my list. Plus she's a Carolina fan, so she can't be all bad.

3. The professors that don't call on you at class: They are nice. You can usually get a full meal out of them if you make little sandwiches.

4. Guaranteed jobs upon graduation: You know what I really hate: THE %#@&* machines. When the damn machines won't take your dollar even when you've died it out and tapped it back together. That we don't get the refund.

5. Free Beer. I've always maintained that the best thing about Villanova is the free beer...

6. The expanded computer facilities. This year you can actually use a computer when you need one, in fact you can play a variety of games on them and there are even rumors of secret directories with pornographic downloads (of course those are just rumors, aren't they Winfred?). Plus there's this thing called e-mail (Professor Perritt can explain it to you) although I don't have an address you've a student here.

7. The librarians. They are experts in their fields (we are lucky just to be in their presence). Several professors are actually good teachers.

8. The students who work for no credit for the last week of drinking (of course those are just rumors, aren't they Winfred?). Plus there's this thing called e-mail (Professor Perritt can explain it to you) although I don't have an address you've a student here.

9. Top ten good things about VLS
   1. Open bar in the lounge.
   2. The professor who gives out outlines for no charge. These poor slobs crank out 200 page comprehensive outlines that save you the trouble of going to class and give them to you for free.
   3. Guiranteed jobs upon graduation.
   4. Beautiful law school gym facilities.
   5. Wonderful intramural program, run flawlessly.
   6. No grade deflation.
   7. Having Dean Frankino's Credit Card.
   8. Free long distance phone calls.
   9. The kind 3Ls and 2Ls that give out free beer.
   10. Free local phone distance calls.

10. The kind of people who work for no credit for the last week of drinking (of course those are just rumors, aren't they Winfred?). Plus there's this thing called e-mail (Professor Perritt can explain it to you) although I don't have an address you've a student here.

11. The students. Once you weed through the losers, the competitive a#$holes (I'm not sure who are really nice.

12. The Flag. O-k so I'm reaching here, but I'm going to get me a job tells me that no one is hiring. Oh, some rocket scientist he is.

February 4th. A close family friend who was going to get me a job tells me that no one is hiring. Oh, some rocket scientist he is. February 5th. Yes, the job search continues on Saturdays. July, I send out a thank you letter. February 7th. I get a rejection letter from the University of Florida Law School Admissions Office. It seems I was rejected off the wait list. Get with this century people. Of course this letter is only slightly less timely than my W-2 forms from 1998.

For those of you who don't do things to do with Villanova?
You know the best thing about VLS: We're not Penn.

13. Bonus employment update. Some action, but basically I'm laying low waiting for the phone to ring before I choose which firm I want to work for.

February 1st. I show up for a lunch interview twenty minutes late. Great start. It's not like me to miss a free meal. Do you think this hurts my chances?

February 3rd. I arrive on time for the free meal. It was a wild lunch. They bit me with the surprise question that I was completely unprepared for: So tell us about yourself. They also finished eating about twenty minutes before I did which is something that never happens. However, I did get compliment points, especially for leaving with just a single stain on my shirt. Unfortunately they're not hiring right now (sound familiar).

remain healthy, they have what it takes to not only overtake Orlando, but also either Chicago or Atlanta if either falters.

The Spurs. For a team that has won seven games in a row and reached the .500 mark for the first time all season, it does not always come easy. The Spurs must continue to be only a mediocre team that barely makes the playoffs. This year will be no different, the team will barely battle the Hornets, Nets, Heat for the last three spots in the playoffs. Count on the Spurs to go 3-2 in Indiana. It seems to always find a way to get his team into the playoffs in the first year that he took over to that he has no contract, he may be time for them to take the 'you have to get worse before you get better' approach. Look for Coach Brown to hold up his tradition and make the playoffs and the Pacers hold up theirs and lose in the first round.

7. 23-24 Miami Heat. The Heat who have as much talent as any team in the NBA just can not seem to break away from mediocrity. Miami could be the first expansion team to make the playoffs, but has since been passed by both Charlotte and Orlando. For some reason this group just doesn't gel together; time might have passed for this group to stay together. Miami thought they had a trade with Utah for Karl Malone but the deal was vetoed at the last minute by Clipper officials. The only hope for this young nucleus of players to build on with Steve Smith, Glen Rice, Ronny Seikaly and Harvey Grant is for John Van Armen to trade to Miami, the Heat should be able to make the deal without breaking this nucleus up. The Heat will make the playoffs, but was diexpressive in the first round.

8. 22-24 New Jersey Nets. The Nets that a team that would do well, making the playoffs but becoming a legitimate Eastern contender last year were doomed by the draft of Drazen Petrovic. As long as this team is without the ill-advised trading of Sam Bowie to the Lakers, N.J. could become a serious contender. The Clips want to send the Heat, the Heat should be able to make the deal without breaking this nucleus up. The Heat will make the playoffs, but was diexpressive in the first round.

New undergroung dorms behind St. Mary's to house 600

by Nathan Warawky

Remley stated that these new spaces should help with the current housing problem at Villanova. Sean Facyh, 3L, attended Villanova for his undergraduate degree, and noted that "I wasn't even guaranteed housing at a freshman." While the new buildings may help the undergraduate school, many law students are concerned over how 600 new students will affect the law school. The most common complaint from law students has been parking situation; however, the new dorms will include 151 parking spaces for all those that have cars there, thereby not affected the amount of parking available for law students.

Many law students, Remley explained, contain two bedrooms, fully equipped kitchens, furnished living rooms, one and a half baths, and are fully carpeted. Aside from the apartments, the school has no plans of building another dining hall, or expanding the dining hall at St. Mary's.
IN SEARCH OF AN NBA CHAMPIONSHIP: THE ALL-STAR BREAK

By Mark Reed

With all playoff positions virtually wrapped up at the All-Star break, all that needs to be decided is the ranking of the teams that as they jockey for position down the stretch. As the break comes, teams like Houston, Phoenix, and Charlotte, need the break to take a breather, get healthy or make adjustments for the second half push for the Championship. While teams like San Antonio, Indiana, Cleveland and Golden State with the season never stopped as they have either been on a long winning streak or have started to gel as a team. Surprisingly teams like Atlanta and Chicago have played over their heads this first half and are competing, not only for their division title, but also the Eastern Conference. With Michael Jordan's retirement and three above-mentioned factors this seems to be the most wide-open race for an NBA Championship in recent memory. In the Eastern Conference Atlanta, Chicago and New York are the only three teams that have legitimate Championship hopes, while in the Western Conference it's Seattle, Houston, San Antonio, Phoenix, and possibly Utah.

Eastern Conference
1. 34-13 Atlanta Hawks. No one, including myself, thought the Hawks were a playoff team let alone a legitimate NBA Champion with Wilkins winning Coach of the Year honors. Coach Lewis with his three-headed monster of Dominique Wilkins and Detlef Blaylock and strongman Kevin Willis, Atlanta has risen to the top of the Eastern Conference and are the surprise team of the year. Stacy Augmon and Andrew Lang round out the starting lineup with Lang plugging up the big hole in the middle that Jon Koncack could never fill. Superstar Craig Ehlo has given Atlanta that needed off court and shockingly Koncack has been a productive member of the team coming off the bench. Wilkins has preached that defense is the key to win a Championship and the Hawks have responded by leading the NBA in defense. What Atlanta has that N.Y. or Chicago does not have is the ability to either run out or roll down on an opponent. Look for Atlanta to win the Central Division.
2. 34-13 Chicago Bulls. Led by Scottie Pippen and fellow all-stars Horace Grant and B.J. Armstrong, the Bulls are overwhelming and playing as if Michael Jordan never left the floor. Pippen has stepped up his game and takes it to new heights. The question of whether he can sustain it through the second half and the playoffs remains to be seen: the regular season is one thing, but the playoffs is another because the games have more meaning. Without Jordan, both Grant and Armstrong have stepped it up offensively but the Bulls still lack that second big scorer. Perhaps it will be rookie Toni Kukoc, who has already won three games with last second shots, that comes to the fore front. Steve Kerr looks to be taking over for the retiring John Paxson's role as Chicago's dependable set-shooter. Look for the Bulls to fade down the stretch, simply because they realize that winning the division title does not make a NBA Champion.
3. 34-14 New York Knicks. The Knicks finally made the trade for a point guard that they needed, but still lack that third scorer that can open up things. Too bad Isaiah Thomas received that sweetheart deal from the Detroit ownership because Isaiah would have satisfied both of the Knicks needs. The Knicks can not feel comfortable with only all-stars Patrick Ewing and John Starks as their proven scorers because that puts too much pressure on both those players and the Knicks' defense. Both of these players can not afford to have a bad game because no other Knick player has stepped up to indicate that they can provide the offense that is needed. Without that third scorer, N.Y. has to play the other under 100 point games and hope that's enough, unlike football a great defense alone will not win you championships. Perhaps the Knicks have what it takes to win a championship with their present squad, but a trade for a scorer like Danny Manning, Lionel Simmons or Chuck Person would put them in a better position for that championship.
4. 27-20 Orlando Magic. The Magic led by NBA leading scorer Shaquille O'Neal and rookie sensation Anfernee Hardaway are knocking on that door of legitimate contenders in the East, but are still a power forward away to be taken seriously. The early season trade for Anthony Avent certainly did not shore up the power forward problem. Orlando has a luxury of players like Scott Skiles and Dennis Scott that would allow the Magic to trade for a stud power forward but Orlando probably needs to be patient with Avent and keep that group together. Shaq has to improve his offensive game and his free throw shooting because opposing teams will continue to foul him once he comes inside. The Magic with their many talents may be able to beat one of the top three contenders and make it to the Eastern Conference Championship. Besides Atlanta, Orlando has the most offensive team among the top four teams in the East and could turn the game into a track meet if they meet either N.Y. or Chicago. Look for the Magic to give way to Cleveland for the fourth spot.

Midwestern Collegiate
1. 24-23 Cleveland Cavs. The Cavs have been playing their best ball all season long before the All-Star break and have to remain playing well to possibly beat out Orlando for the fourth place ranking. It is highly unlikely that they could catch up to Chicago and Atlanta and make it a three team race for the Central division. As the Cavs continue to lose the Cleveland under new Coach Mike Fratello have finally gelled as a team and are fully healthy to make that stretch run for the playoffs and that elusive Championship. While the Cavs have been playing better defense, their offensive output has gone down dramatically with only all-star Mark Price playing up to standards. If Cleveland can

MARCH TO MADNESS: THE FIELDING OF 64

By Mark Reed

March Madness, March Madness, March Madness. It's that time of the year where universities across the U.S. anticipate that their team will make the round of 64. For the local fan interest, it looks like Temple, Penn and probably Drexel will go to the show; the other local teams' only chance of going is if they do the improbable and win they respective conference tournaments. With only four weeks of basketball left before the lucky 64 are picked, let's get a look out on all the conferences and the teams that should make the first cut.
