OPINION OF THE COURT

NYGAARD, Circuit Judge.

I.

Appellant Zewengel Tewelde Fikreyesus, a native and citizen of Eritrea, arrived at John F. Kennedy International Airport in NY, NY, on a flight from Tokyo, Japan, in transit to Bermuda. Appellant told airline personnel that he feared returning to Eritrea and that he wanted to apply for asylum. Appellant was referred to INS for a “credible fear” interview, and the matter was referred for an administrative hearing.

An immigration judge conducted a “merits” hearing at which petitioner testified in support of his application. The immigration judge accepted several exhibits, including the asylum application. Appellant stated that he feared harm as a consequence of his membership and activities with the Eritrean Liberation Front (“E.L.F.”) when he lived in Eritrea, and after he fled to Sudan. This participation, however, was surreptitious, and the immigration judge noted that there was insufficient evidence that the Eritrean authorities were aware of petitioner’s association with the E.L.F. in Eritrea or Sudan. The immigration judge also found that even if the Eritrean authorities discovered Appellant’s activities with the E.L.F. in Sudan, there was insufficient evidence to show that such participation would bring him to some sort of harm if he were to return to Eritrea.

At the conclusion of the hearing, the immigration judge issued her oral decision in which she found Appellant removable and denied the application for asylum, withholding of removal and protection under the Convention Against Torture. The BIA dismissed appellant's appeal, and this appeal followed.

II.

The issue on appeal is whether substantial evidence of record would compel the conclusion that appellant has demonstrated past persecution, or a well-founded fear of persecution if he returns to Eritrea. We conclude he has not and will affirm.

Inasmuch as we write only for the parties and counsel, we find it unnecessary to state in any detail, more than that expressed above, the facts and procedure of this case. It is sufficient to note that the record indicates the existence of substantial evidence which supports the immigration judge's findings that Appellant failed to establish that he suffered past persecution on account of his political opinion. Appellant concealed from the authorities his membership and activities with the E.L.F. In addition, appellant was arrested and detained for one week after he spoke out during military training against conscripting students into the Eritrean army while his country was resisting invasion by Ethiopia. When he deserted, his parents were questioned about his whereabouts.

Simply put, the evidence does not compel a finding that appellant has established eligibility for asylum or withholding of removal. We will affirm.

TO THE CLERK:

Please file the foregoing opinion.
